Giuseppe Garibaldi now lives his life as a wanted man after his small, but numerous, Italian riots; including the boats he managed to illegally sneak onto thanks to his love for exploration. Eventually captured, he is exiled in Rio Grande Do Sol, where he starts to fight alongside the opposition for the liberty of the nation

It is in this year that we celebrate one of his most fascinating achievements; his wife, Anita. After spotting her through his telescope on his ship, already in love, he had no other plans than to make her his own. Like that, a woman with the courage and strength of a man and the beauty and delicacy of a woman, became his sweet other half.

Having now become an expert leader, Giuseppe Garibaldi begins collecting great victories. One of which, in this year, is remembered as one of the most important; the battle of Salto, fought side by side with the Uruguayan navy for the independence of that very same country. A painting of glory crowned by goblets and weapons.

Here, we find Garibaldi as a guest, amongst one of his last political responsibilities; welcomed to London with great acclaim by the Kingdom and the people themselves, a victorious man and unifier of nations. There is nothing to now halt the expansion of his fame, thus, making him the perfect guest for a typical English tea break.

Garibaldi was also an animal rights supporter. Following his purchase of half the island of Caprera, he became increasingly vegetarian. Close contact with solitary nature made him believe animals and plants both have a soul that should not be harmed. In 1871, he formed the first company in Italy for the protection of animals; E.N.P.A.

Caprera, 1882

Italy

Black Tears
